CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT.

The best form of government is a merely academic question fit only for a youth debating club in those halcyon days of irresponsibility when we could still wax eloquent over the wrongs of Mary Stuart or the execution of Charles I. We see men living equally happily under Tsar or President, with occasional outbursts of tyranny under an empire or of corruption under a republic. But there are fashions in these things. At one time Europe and Asia were all feudal, then all absolutist, and now a wave of democratic socialism is sweeping round the globe. China, Persia and Russia are specimens of empires in which the cry is being raised of government by the people, as in Ireland, Finland and Bengal there has been stimulated a movement for some measure of local self government. The circumstances differ in the different cases. Some are perilous, some are trivial. But the basic principle is the same in all. What should be a healthy spirit of self conceit has in many countries become an ignorant impatience of control among those whom a very slight education has taught to consider themselves the people. In Old Mortality Lady Margaret bellenend put her unerring finger on the fault in her reproach of Maude Headrigg, "I see which way the wind blows, the evil spirit of the year sixteen hundred and forty-two is at work again as merrily as ever, and like auld wife in the chimney-nook will be for knapping doctrine wi' doctors o' divinity and the godly fathers o' the church." The old principle that those who think should govern those who toil, must yield place in an age when a cheap press has taught every man to believe himself as competent a thinker as any other.

Bengal is an example. The Government, acting on the best available advice have decided to divide the province and certain level fellows of the baser sort, Bengali lawyers, small school-masters and the like, with the aid of a very free press, threaten an Shipping.
